A bell tolled 25 times as names of Great Falls residents who died in military service or in the 9/11 Pentagon attack were read aloud at the somber gathering on Memorial Day. Six of the names spoken at the Great Falls Freedom Memorial on Monday, May 29, were of those who perished when American Airlines Flight 77 crashed into the Pentagon.

For the occasion, Robert Vickers Jr., who is known in the community as the Great Falls arborist and chairman of the Fairfax County Tree Commission, was invited to speak about another aspect of his life.

“Quite frankly, for many years I have not been able to discuss my service,” Vickers, a retired Army 2nd Lieutenant, said during the ceremony.

He spoke about his time in the military during the Vietnam War, but his difficulty with the subject wasn’t because of his experience in Vietnam.

“It was a very difficult period,” Vickers said. “Not because I had a bad experience there. I had a wonderful experience.”

It was because of the anti-war sentiment he experienced after the war in the ‘70s.

“It’s hard to talk about a conflict that you’ve fought in but also lost,” he said.

In August 1966, he was sent to Vietnam as a member of the 82nd Airborne Division based out of Fort Bragg in North Carolina.

Vickers was “chair-borne,” he joked with the crowd, and was assigned to the Combined Intelligence Command Vietnam (CICV) unit in Saigon that commissioned special studies, he said.

“I never saw combat,” he said. “I got shot at once in a helicopter, but it didn’t come anywhere near us.”

The relationships and cultural exchange he experienced during his time at war made it wonderful for him.

“I got to know the Vietnamese people pretty well ... we got to work with the Vietnamese intelligence officers and I got invited to their homes and met their families,” he said.

Vickers was given several military honors, including the Joint Service Commendation Medal, which is awarded to service members who distinguish themselves by meritorious achievement or service.

“I have to confess, this is the first time I’ve worn it,” he said.

He experienced conflict as soon as he returned to U.S. soil and arranging to fly to his home, which was in New York at the time. Wearing his uniform so he could get free air fare, the airline employee at the ticket counter ignored him.

“Finally, I got his attention and I said, ‘I’d like space available to fly to New York,’” Vickers told the crowd. “He said, ‘I’ll give you space available to fly to hell.’ That was my welcome home.”

Vickers began to realize how powerful the anti-war movement had become, a movement he could understand.

“There’s no such thing as a good war,” he said. “People die on both sides. It’s kill or be killed.”

His time in the military was not something he felt comfortable discussing.

“I didn’t talk about it,” he said. “It was too controversial.”

That changed for Vickers when the Vietnam Veterans Memorial opened in 1982. At first, he did not visit for months. Then a friend convinced him to go and see it.

“I don’t know about you, but having been there, seeing all of those names on that black wall,” he said. “It’s very moving.”

Later, he and his wife decided to visit Vietnam.

“I found Vietnamese people as wonderful as I had remembered them,” he said. “They were very pro-American.”

At the end of his speech, the crowd applauded.

The Great Falls Freedom Memorial

The Freedom Memorial behind the Great Falls Library was inspired by a candlelight vigil that was held on Sept. 11, 2002. Six cherry trees located at the gateway to the plaza serve to honor the memory of the Great Falls residents who perished in the 9/11 attacks in 2001 when American Airlines Flight 77 crashed into the Pentagon.

The memorial was dedicated on Nov. 13, 2004, and has been the location of memorial services on Memorial Day, Sept. 11 and Veterans Day ever since. The centerpiece of the memorial is a rock that symbolizes the “ageless beauty of Great Falls and serves as remembrance of all those who have given themselves in the cause of liberty and freedom,” a plaque reads.

Remembering on Memorial Day 2017

On Memorial Day, we remember all of those who have died in military service, more than 400,000 in World War II, more than 30,000 in Korea, more than 50,000 in Vietnam.

As many as 620,000 soldiers died in the Civil War, stunningly about 2 percent of the population at that time. To compare, while more than 2.5 million soldiers have served in Iraq and Afghanistan, that number is still less than one percent of the U.S. population.

Since Sept. 11, 2001, more than 6,880 U.S. military service men and women have died in support of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

On Memorial Day, there are many ways to remember the fallen, including a visit to Arlington National Cemetery, or many other local commemorations. But at a minimum, wherever you are, you can observe a moment of silence at 12:01 p.m. along with Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America (IAVA), or you can set your own moment at some point during the day.

More than 52,000 U.S. military service members have been wounded in action, although that number is likely to be revised upward. In 2013, the military confirmed traumatic brain injury in more than 220,000 of the more than 2.5 million troops who have served in Iraq and Afghanistan. The long-term consequences of many of these injuries, including mental health consequences, are unknown, but they will require a national commitment to excellence in health care and services for both active duty military personnel and veterans. Virginia's U.S. Senators Mark Warner and Tim Kaine continue to advocate for better service from the Veterans Administration.

Cuts proposed to health care, food assistance and other aspects of the social safety net in the proposed budget would disproportionately harm veterans.

EVERY YEAR around Memorial Day, this newspaper names the local men and women who have died in military service since Sept. 11, 2001.
